Managerial Leadership Development, Self, Other, and Social Contexts and Problem solving, decision making and creative thinking

The National Development Plan is a system developed to eliminate poverty and reduce inequality by 2030. South Africa can contribute to this by promoting leadership, capabilities, growing an inclusive economy and partnership throughout society.

There a number of elements that can lead South Africa to a successful National Development Plan. These include quality of Depth of Information, clear Theory of Change, expert partnerships and concentrated effort. It is necessary for South African businesses to align to it in order to better the economy, create job opportunities and reduce inequality.
An economy that will create more jobs is also one of the National Development Plan Factors. If this factors is dealt with first, it can actually also eliminate other facts that are included on the Plan. It can be seen or viewed as the “Main Factor” or “Main Goal”.
Creating more job opportunities can reduce poverty, inequality, unite a country, increase the economy and also build communities. Giving the unemployed people the opportunity to learn about Businesses and grooming them on how to become successful enterprenuers can help the NDP in a very amazing way. Looking at the current situation around us in workplaces, the 5th Industrial Revolution is moving in. Technology is replacing humans.

Property can be one of successful business ideas. Buying property and having it as your own can be a huge benefit because it can produce income and job opportunities for other people. For example, one can build accommodation for students or just normal accommodation for tenants, or rent out the place for anyone who is looking for an office space or open a club.
There a lot of things that can be done on a property, it can be a double benefit for the owner. You can own the place and also have a business operating and the very same property. It will also be a benefit to unemployed people as you will be creating job opportunities for them depending on the type of Business opened at the property.
This will also reduce poverty, reduce inequality and build the community.
Having good managerial skills can lead to a very healthy and successful business. As a manager and leader one must have good communication skills. Must be able to identify the problem, find cause, plan implementation, implement and monitor. Depending on the results obtained from monitoring the leader can either have solved the problem or needs an alternative plan.

What makes a successful entrepreneur is passion, determination, self-confidence and most important good communication skills. These qualities will surely produce a very successful business and entrepreneur. A happy and healthy working environment is the best and will surely lead the team and business to success.
